

TEBOW TO MISS 2009 SEASON

Donates organs to coaching staff

HIDEOUS HANDSOME

When it's all said and done, Tim Tebow could go down as the finest human being to ever hold a football.

Tebow, a direct descendent of Abraham, is the developer, president, and spokesperson for a progressive youth program designed to enlighten and educate potentially dangerous adolescents entitled Teaching and Urging Reclusive Deviants (TURD).

He has circumcised entire villages in third-world countries.

And he has won two national championships at the University of Florida, Tennessee's most hated rival over the last couple of decades.

As easy as it is for a Knoxvilleian to hate the Gator's quarterback, no matter how noble they may be, it's hard to find anything wrong with Tebow.

The most recent news coming out of Gainesville adds to the dignified legacy of the one they call "Superman."

BLANK newspaper learned on April 1st that Tebow will not only be sitting out his Senior year, but he will give up his football career for good due to the needs of a few members of Florida's coaching staff.

Strength and conditioning coach Buzz "The Moose" Pumperton lost an eye during a deep-sea fishing accident just off the Florida coast late last month. When Tebow heard the news, he was quick to come to the aid of his coach. "The way I look at it, I have two eyes," explained Tebow. An operation to transplant Tebow's left eye, which features 13/11 vision (the highest known visual mark in the world) will take place later in the summer.

New offensive coordinator Denny "Bing Bing" Bluegill received sixth degree burns to his skin in a tanning accident on the same boating trip. Tebow will undergo experimental surgery to extract his flesh a few days after the first operation with the faint hope that coach Bluegill's body doesn't reject the genetically pristine epidermis. "I don't want to live the rest of my life carrying that burden of selfishness," furthered Tebow. "It really wasn't even a question of if I was going to do it. It was more of a question to determine how much of my skin I could spare. And I've decided to give it all away."

Lastly and most shockingly is the development of Tebow's head coach, Urban Meyer, and his need for a new heart. It seems as though Meyer began experiencing trouble when he heard that Tebow had decided to forego his football career. Meyer's condition is the first known case of the disease and Florida doctors have decided to call the illness Tebosity. The rare condition occurs when one person loves another so much that their heart stops working properly. Tebow will complete the trinity of transplant when he gives his heart to his beloved head coach. BLANK Newspaper caught up with Tebow again after we heard of his undying but seemingly very dangerous generosity. "The way I look at it, I have two hearts," he said.

Tebow's only request of the recipients of his organs was that they "not mention it." In fact, Tebow doesn't even want a thank you, saying that it would only lessen the sincerity of the whole thing, "I don't want them to say thanks...it would only lessen the sincerity of the whole thing."

pub@blanknews.com

NEXT MONTH

Full Bonnaroo Preview, Guide to the Smokeys, & UT FOOTBALL!

Former UT football player Paul Monroe hosts Millionaire Monday Trivia from 8:30-Midnight. Multiple winners each week. Win your share of a million dollars.

Food & Drink Specials
57 TV's makes Rays perfect for Baseball, UFC fights, & More

Knoxville NASHVILLE

LABEL THIRTEEN

We specialize in unique, vintage style T-shirts including our exclusive Kurt Vonnegut shirts. Many colors & styles available, all 100% cotton visit: LabelThirteen.com or Ph: 385-4715

ALL SHIRTS ONLY $10/ea w/ S&H

